Description: This beautifully historic one-of-a-kind 26-foot wide limestone and brick Mansion was constructed in 1900 by architect Robert D. Kohn in the Beaux Arts style. The goal was to create a little bit of Paris in New York, and the elegantly designed Mansion at 352 Riverside accomplishes that and more. Listed in the National Registry of Historic Places, the Mansion's original owner was Adolphe Openhym, a wealthy silk merchant. Since then there have only been four owners, each a dedicated steward to historic preservation. Therefore, the intricate details of the original house have been very well preserved
